Village saab

We have been doing business with Village Saab since , and drive them exclusively. We have five Saabs in our family of five, and the safety and longevity of the cars and the honesty of the people keep us with Village Saab. We have never encountered the experiences some others have written about here. However, I have seen very demanding clients in both the sales and the service areas, and felt they were way out of line in their expectations and verbiage. We have done European delivery with VS, as well as new purchases, leases, and used purchases. We have never found better prices or more honest people, even though we have looked around. We still have a and a on the road. We are retiring to Florida soon, but will keep our connection with Village. We'd be thrilled if we could find a commensurate dealer in Florida. While I love the car and am an avid SAAB aficianado, my experience with this dealer's sales person was less than pleasant. When we went in to pick up the car, they allowed us to write a check on the condition they would wait until the money was wired. I post-dated the check for Thursday, but also told the dealer we would be letting him know the status of the wiring. When I called Friday to say the money had not yet been deposited, that it would be there by Monday, he rudely informed me he had deposited the check and that I would have to come in with a bank check as well as incur any costs for the bounced check. My husband and I knew that we had agreed to call the sales person to inform him of the status of the wiring, but knew also, because we post-dated the check, we couln't prove that we had communicated this with him. Obviously, our credit is good and sufficiently so, otherwise, we would not be approved to buy a car, correct? The sales person should have called us to ensure the money was there it was only a matter of a few days before he jumped in and tried to deposit the check. This is a common misunderstanding, however, I don't think the customer should be made to feel like a criminal. We had the funds available. The sales person also would not allow me to write a new check, necessitating hiring a courier to deliver a bank check to Village SAAB as not only did I not want to drive to Acton, I never want to do business with them again. In addition, when I asked how the battery was, the sales person told me it was fine. This was a lie. I have had to have my car jump started at least six times just got the car in October of between November and January before finally buying a new battery. Rude doesnt even begin how bad they are. Their smugness is almost enough to make one sick. I don't understand how they are in business. After I bought a new car from them 2 years ago they couldnt care less that I am ready for a new one. This is one Saab dealer that should be shut down. After I bought my car from them, I recomended a few of my friends who were in the market. They ended up walking out because they couldnt believe how they were being treated. They ended up buying from Charles River and Herb Chambers. I would stay away from this place at all costs. Bought 2 Saabs so far from Village Saab in Acton. In both cases, the sales person Chris was up front with, what turned out to be after exhaustive research, by far the best price. In addition, the fact that I got two consecutive great deals in no way diminished their willingness to extend service, support, and even go above the call of duty in accommodating my needs. When I walk in the door at Service Alex, Marc, and everyone, they greet me by name and know my situation. The repairs and service are always done perfectly and with a smile. My son now runs the older Saab, and he too is well treated. They are certainly cultivating a strong family loyalty to both the brand and the dealership. I am also happy with the cars. If you want something that is fun to drive and doesnt look like every other car on the road, Saab is for you. Personally, if you get the 6 speed manual, you will enjoy these cars more fully I have bought there and it's been great. Please ignore any slanderous, amature sites staing otherwise. That site was made by a woman who will do anything to get on TV or the news. She has been on two different 'ghost' shows. One she asserts herself as an 'investigator' while in another she is a ghost victim being tormented by voices in her home or voices in her head as the case may be - no creditable proof has turned up of said voices she hears. In any case she does all these things to be on TV and get business for her tacky web design company. The people at this dealership go above and beyond others. Don't buy the rants of a person who will do anything to be on TV or the limelight, including trying to destroy the creditability of a good dealership. I recently put down a deposit on a car at village saab. I was trying to wrap up the sale quickly because I had to go out of town. So I called the salesperson 3x and emailed him at least 5 times. Unfortunately, he was with another customer - which I can understand. However, what I can not understand is why he had to tell me unprovoked "i don't sit around waiting for your emails all day, I do have other customers". Wouldn't it have been just as easy to say - I am sorry I was with another customer, what can I do for you now? It was such an offensive conversation that I ended up asking for the manager. The manager was of no help. So I ended up getting my deposit back. Even though there price was good, I was terrified of what there customer service would be like. Here I was ready - cash in hand - ready to buy and they just didn't seem to want to finish the sale. They inspired me to go back to BMW. Attention to detail and great customer service always brings us back. The silly web site that is floating around the internet is ridiculous. Someone who would devote that much time over a misunderstanding needs to get a life. Everyone I have ever talked to has been extremely satisfied with the service at Village Saab in Acton. Cant make everyone happy, but these guys sure will try there best. Highly recommended. Duffy, the salesperson was so rude to me I had to speak with the manager. He handed my husband the key in the middle of a snowstorm and told us to 'find the car' somewhere out in the parking lot. Numerous problems with the used vehicle we purchased and went back several times after being told the parts we ordered were in, to find out they made a mistake. I almost didn't buy my Saab from village since i saw some negative feedback on the internet, mainly from that one site that says explicitly "village saab sucks" - i'm glad I didn't let that keep me from checking it out myself. We got THE most excellent deal on a x in the whole state - believe me, me and mywife shopped around. They gave me an internet price quote and threw in some excellent bonuses to give us a great deal. We bought the x to replace our Audi allroad, and believe me, the deal itself was great and the car is a definite winner - i've recommended Village to all of my friends, co-workers, anyone who has asked about our car. I believe the name of the internet manager we dealt with was Chris Campos - by far a great business relationship. We also had to drive quite a ways to get to Acton and Chris was very flexible with us. My only complaint is that I like my coffee stronger than their machine made it! I recently purchased a vehicle at Village Saab and was very pleased with my experience. The car was ready when promised with all the paperwork completed properly. The sales staff was knowledgable and friendly. I had been to some of the larger area dealerships but felt more comfortable at Village Saab. I would recommend this dealership. Cities in India are hubs of everything from stylish cars to fast food chains. Epitomes of globalization and cultural integration, city life offers a wide arena of opportunities and facilities. Village is some place where we go during our summer holidays. Boundaries are marked by arrays of mango trees, puddles and ponds replace the swimming pools and any vacant patch of land can turn into playgrounds here. Dew on grass blades, petrichor, rituals and celebrations are nowadays becoming exclusive to the villages. This article tries to enlist the differences between village and city life. However, the article is based on a lot of stereotypes. The villages in India are constantly evolving and are on the path towards technological and economic progress. The soul of India lies in its villages. Located in the lap of nature, villages serve as a source of refreshment and inspiration. Their ambience provides a soothing effect. Away from the din and rush of cities, villages offer a picturesque view of nature and also calm and peace to the senses. The air is free from pollution and emissions. There is neither the frustration over the speed of the internet nor the hustle and bustle of the modern life. Cities are crowded, polluted and noisy. Cleanliness drives and awareness fail to do much to improve the ambience. The striking factor that comes to our minds when we think about the differences between cities and villages is the buildings and infrastructure. Glass paned skyscrapers and well maintained buildings are the highlight of every city. Office space as well as living space gets smaller and smaller in the cities. In villages the homes are traditional. There are large areas of open spaces as well. Native villagers are people who have always lived in their particular villages throughout their lives. They are accustomed to the traditional and simple ways of living. Since the villages in India are the agricultural centres, most of the villagers are farmers or undertake farm related works. People in villages are known for their harmonious and helpful nature. City dwellers are usually migrants from various areas and are employed in the organized sectors. Work, pay cheques and a modern lifestyle being their usual priorities, they hardly have time for any other activities. They tend to have various beliefs and superstitious owing to their poor educational background. Religion plays a major role in their lives and they follow it strictly. People have their networks and social circles. In cities this is usually restricted to social networking sites and the virtual world. People in cities hardly have time. Holidays and occasions are opportunities for social get togethers and reunions. Parties have become the social convention and night clubs, discotheques and pubs are becoming more popular in cities. Every day in a village brings one in contact with many people. There is constant interaction and communication with the neighbours which highlights the fact that no one is a stranger to anyone in a village. Means of transportation vary from bullock or horse carts, bicycles and walking in the villages. Long distance travels are usually undertaken by the public buses. Villages are interconnected by poor roads. Further the villagers often lack the resources and skills to own or use the modern vehicles. Further, their needs are minimal and basic. Therefore the resources that they need are often found in close vicinity which reduces their need for travel. One of the primary features of cities is the vehicles and traffic. Most of the city dwellers own private vehicles. Apart from this there are many options with regard to means of transportation in cities. Metro railways, public and private buses and cab services are some of them. Car pooling is gaining popularity in the city owing to the need for environmental and financial concerns. Shopping has emerged as a popular phenomenon particular to cities. With the emergence of a large numbers of malls and complexes, shopping has become a source of entertainment. People from the villages and small towns come to the metropolitan cities especially to satisfy their requirements at the malls. Festivals, weddings and any other occasion see a major boom in the number of shoppers. The cities offer a variety of items which are better in quality. Malls and retail chain stores offer even the daily supplies. Shopping in villages is often a walk to the nearest grocery shop to buy the daily supplies. The stores are small in number and in sizes in the villages. The villagers are often unaware of the wide varieties and brands of products that are available in the cities. The sources of entertainment vary in villages and cities. Village fairs draw a lot of attention. The villagers often have regular meetings and fun activities. They discuss issues and socialize during this time. Entertainment in villages is in close interaction with nature. Walking amidst green fields, showering in the rains and eating delicious fruits straight from the trees were entertainment in itself. The sources of entertainment in the cities vary. From shopping malls and multiplexes to amusement parks, exhibitions, restaurants, pubs and clubs, entertainment is the backbone of city life. However, the means of entertainment in the cities are much more expensive and sophisticated than the ones in villages. Holidays in cities are a quiet affair. These are the very few occasions that the city dwellers get to relax and take time out of their busy, demanding work life. Holidays generally call for waking up late and lazing throughout the day with an outing or dinner at the end of the day. However, the holidays in villages are filled with fun and frolic. Food is an essential aspect in any social system. The type of food, types of cooking and the ways of dining differ in different communities. City life being busy and haphazard, food has a very prominent place. However, it is in sync with the lifestyle of the city dwellers. Mostly it is a simple and quick affair. This could be the reason why there are many take away and food joints in the cities. Villages are the ultimate place for traditional homemade and tasty food. The raw materials used in cooking are usually homemade too. From fresh milk to the sweets coated in pure ghee, food in villages is a treat to the taste buds. The schools in the village usually follow the vernacular medium of instruction. English is mostly unknown. Cities are hybrid zones. They are a mix of different cultures, languages and people. Therefore, in order to function, it is important to have and follow a common language of communication. In the Indian cities, Hindi and English are widely used. From shopkeepers and taxi drivers to the corporate managers, it is important that everybody knows an
